Biomass, Anaerobic Digesters, & Wood

An anaerobic digester is a man-made system that recovers methane from animal manure or other waste materials through a process called anaerobic digestion. It produces biogas that can be converted to heat and electricity and an end product called sludge, or effluent. It is rich in nutrients (ammonia, phosphorus, potassium, and more than a dozen trace elements) and is an excellent soil conditioner. Biomass is material derived from dead organisms. It includes plants, animals and their by-products. For example, tree limbs, manure, garden waste and crop residues are all sources of biomass. It is a renewable energy source. Biomass can also be used directly for heating or power.

Builders, Architects, Consultants, Contractors, Engineers

Starting from the design idea through implementation and ultimately to the home or the offices of the final user, energy efficient building and remodeling spans a range of tools and techniques. The buildings use tight construction, effective insulation, air sealing, daylighting, efficient windows, ventilation, doors, heating and cooling, appliances and water heating. They could include, but are not limited to, insulating concrete forms (ICF), structural insulated panels (SIP), solar tubes, skylights, solar heat/water heating, geothermal heat sources, radiant floors, duct sealing, and more. These buildings are cost effective to own and operate.

Programs:

- Energy Star is a government-backed program helping businesses and individuals protect the environment through superior energy efficiency.
- Built Green™ is an environmentally-friendly, non-profit, residential building program of the Master Builders Association of King and Snohomish Counties, developed in partnership with King County, Snohomish County, and other agencies in Washington State. They provide consumers with easy-to-understand rating systems, which quantify environmentally friendly building practices for remodeling and new home construction, communities and multifamily development units.
- LEED (The Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design) is a Green Building Rating System developed by the US Green Building Council. It provides standards for environmentally and sustainable construction. LEED Accredited Professionals have a thorough understanding of green building principles and practices and the LEED Rating System.
- Green Building (green construction or sustainable building) is the practice of creating structures and using processes that are environmentally responsible and resource-efficient throughout a building's life-cycle: from siting to design, construction, operation, maintenance, renovation, and deconstruction.

Builders - Specialty

(ICFs, SIPs, Straw bale, Rammed Earth, more)

Some Types of Specialty Building:

ICFs (Insulating concrete forms) use rigid plastic foam forms that hold concrete in place during curing; the forms remain afterwards, serving as thermal insulation for the concrete walls. The foam sections are lightweight, are energy-efficient and durable.

SIPs (Structural insulated panels) are panels typically made by putting rigid foam plastic insulation between two pieces of strand board (OSB). The result is strong, energy efficient and cost effective.

EIFs (Exterior Insulation Finish Systems) are a building product that provide exterior walls with a finished surface, insulation and waterproofing in one system. EIFS are also known as synthetic stucco.

Straw-bale construction is a building method using straw bales as structural elements, insulation, or both. Commonly used in natural building, it has advantages over conventional building systems because of cost, easy availability and high insulation value.

Sustainable or Eco Communities – are communities planned, built, or repurposed to promote sustainable living. The focus is on environmental and economic sustainability, and green built homes normally to LEED standards.

Rammed earth construction is an old building method using a process of compressing a damp mixture of earth that has suitable proportions of sand, gravel and clay (sometimes with an added stabilizer) into an external supported frame that molds the shape of a wall section creating a solid wall of earth.

Education

Energy education is traditionally for electricians, HVAC, power plants, energy transmission and so on. With the renewed interests in alternative energy, classes in biodiesel, car conversions, solar and more have started to be included in the mainstream of education. The following is a listing of education available in the state, not only in colleges, but also by independent businesses.

Fuels, Alternative – Biofuels & Other

Biofuel Manufacturers, Distributors, Equipment & Education

Biofuels are a solid, liquid, or gas fuel consisting of or derived from biomass. The most common use of biofuel is for vehicle transportation (replacing petroleum products). The two most common types of biofuels are ethanol (made from the starch of plants) and biodiesel (made from the oil of plants).

Lighting & Daylighting

Daylighting is the practice of placing windows, or other transparent media, and reflective surfaces so that, during the day, natural light provides effective internal illumination. Energy savings from daylighting are achieved either from the reduced use of electric lighting or from passive solar heating or cooling. Efficient, cost-effective lighting technologies, along with advanced windows and space heating and cooling technologies can help reduce total building energy use by 60 to 70 percent. This improvement in component and system energy efficiency, coupled with onsite renewable energy supply systems, can result in net zero energy buildings.
